About the Author Natasha Lisitsa, owner and lead designer of Waterlily Pond Floral and Event Design Studio in San Francisco, California, has become internationally recognized for her vivacious style and innovative use of materials. Natasha worked as an engineer before leaving the high-tech industry to pursue her love of flowers and design. She studied at the Sogetsu School of Ikebana and developed her own style fusing Eastern and Western principles, often referred to as 'exuberant Ikebana'. Natasha founded Waterlily Pond Studio in 2001 and grew it into one of the most sought-after sources for floral art and event design in the San Francisco Bay Area and beyond. Waterlily Pond has created flowers and decor for over 1000 weddings and special events. The studio has been commissioned by the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art, the de Young Museum and other prominent cultural organizations to create large-scale floral art installations, some of them up to 1000 pounds in weight. Natasha loves to share her passion for exuberant floral art with other designers and enthusiasts in lecture-demonstrations. She represented the USA in the international wedding design book Floever Wherever, featuring designers from across the world, published by Stichting Kunstboek. Her work has been featured in many international and U.S. publications.
